

The Voices of Youth Count, the first comprehensive national study on the prevalence of homelessness among young people in the United States, found in 2017 that young adults without a high school diploma are 4.5 times more likely to experience homelessness, emphasizing the importance of education as a protective factor from homelessness later in life as young people transition into adulthood.

Back to webpage.